- b an idea that is slightly crazy, in a good way
- c an idea that is completely crazy, in a bad way
- d an idea that has not been carefully thought out
- e an idea that seems very impressive but is not really very practical

- 2 Now look at the section marked VERB + IDEA. Find verbs that you might use to express the following ideas. Usually more than one verb is possible.

- a to find an idea
- b to suggest an idea
- c to suggest an idea in a very forceful way because you really want people to accept it
- d to think about an idea for a while before you decide whether or not it is a good idea
- e to talk about a number of different ideas before you decide which ideas are the best

- 3 Look at the section marked IDEA + VERB. Find verbs that you might use to express the following:

- a when you think of an idea
- b when an idea develops into something important
- c when an idea does not develop into anything

- 4 Finally, look at the PHRASES section and find the expression that means the beginning of an idea.

Labels used in the dictionary

Labels used in the dictionary generally apply to the collocation – that is to the two words in combination – and not to the individual words.

The following labels are used with collocations that express a particular attitude or are appropriate in a particular situation.

disapproving collocations show that you feel disapproval or contempt, for example rabbit food or descend into the realms of sth.

figurative collocations use language in a non-literal or metaphorical way, as in morally bankrupt or die of embarrassment.

formal collocations are usually only used in serious or official language and would not be appropriate in normal everyday conversation. Examples are take up employment and fall sick.

historical collocations are expressions for things or concepts that existed in the past. They either no longer exist (debtor's prison) or the modern equivalent has a different name. (The modern term is lending library rather than circulating library.) However, the historical term is still used when talking about the past.

humorous collocations are intended to be funny, for example veritable banquet or ply sb with tea.

informal collocations are used between friends or in a relaxed or unofficial situation. They are not appropriate for formal situations. Examples are class act and a company goes to the wall.

ironic collocations use words to mean the opposite or something very different from the meaning they seem to have, as in princely sum (= a very small amount of money) or conveniently ignore (which may be very convenient for the person doing the ignoring, but not for anyone else).

literary collocations are used mainly in literature and imaginative writing, for example far distant and greet the dawn.

offensive collocations are used by some people to address or refer to people, countries, etc. in a way that is very insulting, for example banana republic.

old-fashioned collocations are passing out of current use, although writers may still wish to use them for a particular effect, especially in fiction. An example would be give sb in marriage.

saying describes a fixed collocation that is a well-known traditional phrase, for example the truth will out.

taboo words are likely to be thought by many people to be obscene or shocking and you should avoid using them. They are included here where the collocations are very strong. However, these words are always taboo, whatever the collocation.

technical collocations are used by people who specialize in a particular subject area.

The following labels also show collocations from particular subject areas:

business computing

law mathematics

medical military

science sport
